

Council on Education for Public Health

Social Media Policy

The Council on Education for Public Health understands that its stakeholders value opportunities to network, ask questions and share knowledge and supports these activities in many ways, including through the use of social media. CEPH aims to create opportunities for those involved in or affected by the accreditation of public health degrees to interact with colleagues and peers online and in traditional meeting environments.

CEPH's use of social media, such as LinkedIn and Facebook, seeks to foster an open forum for dialogue and to further its mission to "assure quality in public health education and training to achieve excellence in practice, research and service, through collaboration with organizational and community partners."

CEPH expects all participants of these online communities to interact respectfully. CEPH reserves the right to delete any content deemed offensive or inappropriate and may remove members who promote such content. An example of inappropriate content is the promotion of unaccredited degrees and programs. In addition, content or actions that are defamatory, pornographic, proprietary, harassing, libelous or threatening are explicitly forbidden.
